Chris Wilder's Forest Green Rovers have completed the signing of 18-year-old Wigan Athletic midfielder James Meredith on a season-long loan. Meredith is the latest of four new recruits made at The New Lawn by Rovers in this transfer window. He has joined on an initial six-month deal. Rovers had two bids for the Wigan star rejected earlier this summer, with the player being spotted with a number of Championship clubs earlier in the season. "He has been nurtured by Wigan and many of their academy staff, and was always seen as a player with huge potential. "He made his debut for Wigan as a youngster back in the 2006-07 season, and has gone on to make over 50 first-team appearances for the Latics over the last five years. "He will be a player we can utilise in many different positions, and add to what we already have in our squad. "We look forward to welcoming him to the Club." Meredith will join Forest Green's other new signings, Ryan Mowbray (right) and Jordan Williams, at the New Lawn this coming week ahead of their opening pre-season fixture with Bromley on July 2.Q: How to get values from multiple columns in one key column using fread() in R? I am trying to do some NLP and need to do multinomial classifications using the RLR2 package (I'd like to use the fread() function from the qda() function of the rlr2 package, but I can't quite figure out how to get the values for the columns I need for the multinomial classification. I can read in a spreadsheet with R using the read.csv() function and get the first variable as the class code: data_read

When researchers map out the dynamics of a gene network, they need to know what the length of the normal time delay between two events is. The Standard Approach finds this out. The Standard Approach Biological pathway diagrams use a graphical notation known as 'arrows' to represent time-delayed events. These events involve the transportation of a chemical 'nucleic acid' (DNA for example) inside a cell from one site to another, but the direction of the transport is not specified. In pathways, from this 'how-far-can-I-get-in-one-direction' question comes a further question 'how-long-it-takes-for-me-to-get-there?' The answer to this second question is an important parameter for researchers trying to predict the gene network dynamics. We say that there is a 'time-delay' between events A and B in the pathway (we will call this $T(A)$) if A causes B or B causes A. Most events have no time-delay between them, but some do. The Standard Approach is to measure this time delay: take the time between A and B, then divide it by the total time between A and B. Problem: A time-delay is measured in units of time (say seconds), but the overall time elapsed between A and B is arbitrary. This is problematical because the units for $T(A)$ can change depending on the order of the events. Let's say there is a delay between A and B (i.e. $T(A)$
