Madam President,

At the outset, let me congratulate Lithuania on the assumption of the presidency of the Council for the month of February.

Please accept our thanks and congratulations for placing this important item on the agenda and for the comprehensive concept note you have prepared outlining key elements for the discussions today.

We also thank the Secretary-General for his substantive report on this issue and also thank those who briefed the Council for the useful information and insights.

Thailand, as a member of the Human Security Network, aligns itself with the statement of the Network to be delivered later this afternoon by the distinguished representative of Slovenia.

Madam President,

For a number of years, we have in this Chamber discussed the subject of protection of civilians in armed conflict. A number of Security Council resolutions and presidential statements on this issue have been adopted. Yet regrettably, we still see today an alarming number of civilian casualties, including unfortunately women and children, in many areas of armed conflict.

Since today's debate focuses on enhancing protection by UN Peacekeeping Missions, one of the five core challenges to the protection of civilians highlighted by the Secretary-General, I shall keep my statement within that scope.

First, the following principles are now well established. That it is the State has the primary responsibility to protect its citizens. That all parties to armed conflict must honour and strictly comply with their obligations under international laws, international humanitarian and human rights laws. Leaders of Peacekeeping Missions with protection mandates need to understand clearly their mandates and priorities from the relevant UNSC resolutions. Likewise, military and police personnel and other troop components at all levels in the chain of command need to be fully informed and understand their mandates and responsibilities. This makes it essential that member states and the United Nations work closely to ensure that these key elements are sent to, received and implemented by all those involved in such missions.

Second, it is essential that there is common understanding of any peacekeeping mission protection mandates among the relevant actors, namely host countries, troop and police contributing countries, parties to the conflict, military and police personnel and other protection actors.
